Business Analyst Free University. Study notes, October 2026.

Jira, Confluence, Visio, Miro, Lucid, and Figma.

Jira, Confluence, Visio, Miro, Lucid, and Figma are places teams keep work. The decision still lives in a sentence a person can accept. Put the outcome and the test on the ticket. Put the decision, the date, and the owner on the page. A polished board with no limit is still a list.

- Title: show the return reason. Description: the story and one Given-When-Then. Link: the business need identifier. Status moves to done only when that scenario passes.
- The screenshot in the ticket is an illustration. The scenario is the requirement.
- Jira. Atlassian's getting-started guide for Jira opened. Use it to keep work visible: items, states, and owners. The workflow should match the real approval path. Do not add states nobody will use.
- Confluence. Confluence is Atlassian's space for longer pages. A requirement page needs an owner, a status, and a link to the backlog item. A page without a status looks current long after it is not.
- Azure DevOps boards. Microsoft's Azure DevOps backlogs documentation opened. Boards are another place teams order work. The analysis habits are the same as in Jira: one backlog, clear states, and acceptance criteria on the item.
- Visio. Microsoft's Visio support home opened. Visio is a diagramming product teams use for process and system drawings. The drawing is only as good as the labels. Export a copy stakeholders can open.
- Lucid and BPMN. Lucid's BPMN tutorial opened. Use a shared diagram when more than one person must edit. Agree on a small stencil so the file does not become a clip-art board.
- Miro. Miro's Kanban page opened. A board is useful in a workshop because people can move notes. After the workshop, copy the decisions into the system of record. A board that is the only copy will be lost.
- Figma. Figma's home page opened. It is a collaborative design surface teams use for interfaces. Treat a frame as a prototype at a stated fidelity. Comments on a frame are not approved requirements until someone records them as such.

- Power Platform and Dynamics. Microsoft's Power Platform ALM overview and the Dynamics 365 implementation guide both opened. They are relevant when a solution will be configured rather than only described. The business analyst still writes the need, the roles, and the acceptance checks. This is study context, not a claim of delivery experience.
- Question. A ticket is done when:
